The Tech

Cambridge, Mass., Saturday, May 3, 1942

Complimentary

Draft Explained

Full text of Col. Compton's address

As this academic year comes to a close, I wish to report to you on plans made by the Army and Navy for the voluntary enlistment of college students. These plans are designed to give opportunities and obligations as they do noticoscopic college students, and to make clear to them the advantages of being available for the defense of the country.

One of the most reassuring aspects of our present national policy is the recognition that the supply of technically trained young men and women from our educational institutions must be cut off in the early stages of the war. Perhaps, we’ve known that the draft must come, but we’ve been in no doubt about when. Indeed, it would be legitimate to call our educational institutions and our educational goals in general the main man power into this mighty effort. We have no assurance that the system of education in our country will continue to function in a way that will ensure the best possible equipment of the armed forces.

The statement that the defense of the country requires the withdrawal of a limited number of students from our educational institutions is not new. It is part of the common wisdom. The question of how this nation will meet the demands of the war is a matter for decision in the hands of those who have the responsibility of making national policy.

In outlining these various plans for military service, I do not wish to create the impression of a need for military service. I am not implying that the supply of technically trained men is inadequate or that the armed forces are in danger of insufficiency. I am not implying that the plans for military service in this country are any way less adequate than the plans for military service in any other country. I am not implying that the plans for military service in this country are in any way less adequate than the plans for military service in any other country.

To sum up the opportunities and obligations of college students for military service, I would emphasize that college students, irrespective of their choice of major study, are subject to the draft if they reach the age of 18 before the end of the academic year of their college work. In this respect, the plans for military service in this country are similar to those in any other country.

Draft Explained

As the year comes to a close, I wish to report to you on plans made by the Army and Navy for the voluntary enlistment of college students. These plans are designed to give opportunities and obligations as they do noticoscopic college students, and to make clear to them the advantages of being available for the defense of the country.

One of the most reassuring aspects of our present national policy is the recognition that the supply of technically trained young men and women from our educational institutions must be cut off in the early stages of the war. Perhaps, we’ve known that the draft must come, but we’ve been in no doubt about when. Indeed, it would be legitimate to call our educational institutions and our educational goals in general the main man power into this mighty effort. We have no assurance that the system of education in our country will continue to function in a way that will ensure the best possible equipment of the armed forces.

The statement that the defense of the country requires the withdrawal of a limited number of students from our educational institutions is not new. It is part of the common wisdom. The question of how this nation will meet the demands of the war is a matter for decision in the hands of those who have the responsibility of making national policy.

In outlining these various plans for military service, I do not wish to create the impression of a need for military service. I am not implying that the supply of technically trained men is inadequate or that the armed forces are in danger of insufficiency. I am not implying that the plans for military service in this country are any way less adequate than the plans for military service in any other country. I am not implying that the plans for military service in this country are in any way less adequate than the plans for military service in any other country.

To sum up the opportunities and obligations of college students for military service, I would emphasize that college students, irrespective of their choice of major study, are subject to the draft if they reach the age of 18 before the end of the academic year of their college work. In this respect, the plans for military service in this country are similar to those in any other country.

Applications for Reserve Enlistment

Will Be Made Entirely Voluntary; Prof. Mitsch To Serve As Advisor

Speaking before the second World War II convocation of the staff and students of the Institute today explained the voluntary enlistment program for college students as recently adopted by the Army and Navy. In addition, he described the changes made in the policy of deferment for all college students.

Enlistment Dates Not Set

Students will be notified of the application for M.I.T. students under the Enlisted Reserve plan have not yet been specified by either the Naval or the Army authorities. It is expected that the dates will be announced in a few weeks.

Students wishing to enter the Enlisted Reserve should watch for announcements and make application at the specified time.

Junior From Plans Started

Committee To Hold Undergraduate Poll

The Junior from Plans Committee, held an important meeting yesterday. At which it was decided that the three tomorrow questions facing the en- listment would be decided by a school referendum, according to Professor George A. B. B. The poll is planned to take place as soon as school resumes next fall.

The first two questions will cover the point concerning the choice of whether the students would rather have a midshipman's or an officer candidate at Tech.

The third question will be decided by a school referendum on the present circumstance, that the students would rather have a midshipman or an officer candidate at Tech.

In regard to the Enlisted Reserve, the plans are voluntary, and the students will be subject to be called or to be on the staff of the Institute.

On the occasion of the second World War II convocation of the staff and students of the Institute, Dr. Karl T. Compton today explained the voluntary enlistment program for college students as recently adopted by the Army and Navy. In addition, he described the changes made in the policy of deferment for all college students.

Applications for Reserve Enlistment

Will Be Made Entirely Voluntary; Prof. Mitsch To Serve As Advisor

Speaking before the second World War II convocation of the staff and students of the Institute today explained the voluntary enlistment program for college students as recently adopted by the Army and Navy. In addition, he described the changes made in the policy of deferment for all college students.

Enlistment Dates Not Set

Students will be notified of the application for M.I.T. students under the Enlisted Reserve plan have not yet been specified by either the Naval or the Army authorities. It is expected that the dates will be announced in a few weeks.

Students wishing to enter the Enlisted Reserve should watch for announcements and make application at the specified time.

Junior From Plans Started

Committee To Hold Undergraduate Poll

The Junior from Plans Committee, held an important meeting yesterday. At which it was decided that the three tomorrow questions facing the enlistment would be decided by a school referendum, according to Professor George A. B. B. The poll is planned to take place as soon as school resumes next fall.

The first two questions will cover the point concerning the choice of whether the students would rather have a midshipman's or an officer candidate at Tech.

The third question will be decided by a school referendum on the present circumstance, that the students would rather have a midshipman or an officer candidate at Tech.

In regard to the Enlisted Reserve, the plans are voluntary, and the students will be subject to be called or to be on the staff of the Institute.