College Curricula Are Not Meeting Work Shortages

More than half of the 1942 graduates of American colleges and universities believe that the curricula of their institutions are not meeting the demands of the war effort. In a survey conducted by the American Council on Education, over 150,000 freshmen and 125,000 seniors were questioned. While 84 per cent of all the students completing their college courses this spring will not find occupational shortages such as those that existed in 1941, the picture of engineering, the physical sciences, medicine and its related fields is not as bright. Nearly 90 per cent of the freshmen who are entering occupational shortages destituted by the survey believe that the scientific and specialized personnel must be educated in larger numbers. A recent publication polled more than 1,000 colleges and universities, professionals, and teacher-training institutions to find an inestimable number of young men and women could serve their country to the fullest extent for the cause. A camp where gaiety and music are held to the fullest extent could have only one effect: to make sure that they serve their country to the fullest extent for the cause. A camp where gaiety and music are held to the fullest extent could have only one effect: to make sure that they serve their country to the fullest extent for the cause. A camp where gaiety and music are held to the fullest extent could have only one effect: to make sure that they serve their country to the fullest extent for the cause.

Representatives of Industry To Interview Students Aug. 10

It appears that out of a class of 10,000 students, 1,000 are being interviewed for jobs. With the increasing number of industries and colleges that are being interviewed, it is imperative that these incoming freshmen realize the importance of their position. It is imperative that these incoming freshmen realize the importance of their position.

Students who have been selected to participate in this event should do so because the companies that are being interviewed are on the lookout for the best Boston has to offer. One can be reasonably positive of getting a position in the field of work.

One last word of advice: the students who are interested in this event should do so because the companies that are being interviewed are on the lookout for the best Boston has to offer. One can be reasonably positive of getting a position in the field of work.