SECURITY IS THE WATCHWORD

Security in Webster's dictionary is defined as "the condition of being protected or not subject to danger." Throughout the war, the phrase has taken on new meaning and significance. As technology, defines the term more explicitly in his official notice to the Institute which appears on the front page.

BUSINESSMAN's

Managing Board

General Manager

Lamar Field, '45

Dean of Faculty: W. Spauldingale, Jr., '46

Business Manager

Irwin M. Jennis, '45

Advocates of Co-operative Enterprise

OFFICES OF THE TECH

Published every Tuesday and Friday during College Year on the Campus of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, Mass.

SUBSCRIPTION: $1.50

PUBLISHERS OF "The Tech," the MIT Daily Magazine

Associated Collegiate Press

Distributed by Collegiate Press

Distributor

400 Copley Place

This is an excerpt from a newspaper article. The content is a mix of personal narratives and factual information related to security during wartime. The article mentions plans for conversion of facilities and discusses the spread of illness among fraternities. It also includes a personal story about a student's experience with security precautions. The narrative is rich with details about the daily life and challenges faced during the war.