HEINE "THE FUTURE SMELLS OF BLOOD"

The what and the wherefore of our mortal enemies, the Nazis, has constantly challenged imaginative writers. With every new edition of every periodical is propounded a novel explanation of the Genus Germanus, and in many cases these explanations are ingenious beyond comparison but always there remains an inexplicable segment of the German mind which prevents complete understanding.

One man has truly fashioned contemporary Nazism. His words testify that he has approached Nazism from the spiritual side. He is--as far as I can determine--the only writer to approach Nazism from the apologetic forces for before he died eight years ago, Heinrich Heine wrote, "The German revolution will not be milder and gentler because it was preceded by Kant's 'Critique', by Fichte's transcendental idealism and by every philosophy of nature. These doctrines have developed revolutionary forces that wait only for the day when they can emerge and fill the world with terror and admiration."

"There will be Kantians forthcoming who will hear nothing of petty..." Armed Fichtians will enter the lists whose fanaticism of will can be curbed neither by fear nor by self-interest. But the most terrible of all will be natural philosophers taking an active part in a German revolution and identifying themselves with the work of destruction."

"That teleism (of Christianity) is brittle. The day will come when it will pitlessly collapse. Then the old stone gods will rise from the forgotten rubbish and Thor will leap upward with an exultation with which the German soul is satisfied."

Doest this last familiar sound? It is. Her Goebbels spirit is a kinsman of Goethe's. With the world's destruction, the Walker Memorial Committee could compose its survey of the group. In another case, the Association of General Contractors, one of the oldest professional societies, was saved by the timely intervention of active members.

FUTURE OF ACTIVITIES?

With commendable foresight, the Institute Committee last night voted down a motion which would have removed Class B activity recognition from certain associations on campus. In one case, the Physics Association, which will use the axe which the Walker Memorial Committee could compose its survey of the group. In another case, the Association of General Contractors, one of the oldest professional societies, was saved by the timely intervention of active members.

There's plenty to learn here—the names, the times, and the places. Not least, when we have a group, such as the.activity of the next six weeks of O.C.S. students. There will always be a few of them who will bring the realization of the dream. We will have to help them, and the wild goose chase that is always going to crop up around the first six weeks of O.C.S. students.
