A.S.T. Program At Technology To Be Closed

Order Affects Only Upper Class; Air Corps To Remain

The Commanding General of the First Service Command has notified the Institute the Army Specialist Training Program at Technology will be discontinued on April 1st. This change involves only members of the A.S.T.P. assignment.

The Meteorological Cadets of the Army Air Corps will complete their work on their present schedule. J.O.B. TV unit went operational at the Institute in March, 1943, when slightly more than 300 students were detailed from the Army Service Commands throughout the country for special, Civilian, Mechanical, and Electrical Projects. Many members of the class were given special research opportunities in Mathematics, Physics, and either Drawing or Chemistry before beginning the enginering phases of their training.

The A.T.P. at the Institute went into operation in November, 1941. The training program had existed in the Engineering schools for many years and included hundreds of hours of practical training and several weeks of military instruction.
