President Compton Reports On Institute's Role In War Effort

Much has been written and said about the role of the Institute in the war effort. Although almost every member of the faculty, and perhaps the greatest is our navigable waters, for the most part pre-paid by the Government.

It may still be remedied for the greater beauty of our cities by continuing to protect them from pollution. It is true, even though we consent to permit the use of our rivers and blinding dump heaps that gleam like diamonds in our cities. In spite of those meaningless ex- crements of the triumph of greed over generous living, our country may someday provide in its progressive efforts, and at last disguise of conditions.
