Nautical Museum Opened In 1921
By F. Russell Hart

Although the act of 1918, which incorporated Technology, provided for the establishment of a Museum of Arts, such a museum was not opened until May, 1921, through the efforts of Charles H. Pratt, the Institute was able to provide space for a Nautical Museum, which was opened in the fall of 1921. So many ships poured in that two new rooms were added. The cause of the museum, the North wing, was closed. The museum was organized under the patronage of Francis Russell Hart, W.1, whose extensive knowledge of American history, literature, and prints was of great value. It's personal interest had much to do with the success of the museum. The Naval records perpetuate his memory by carrying his name.

Famous Ships Portrayed
At the start it was proposed that collection of models be assembled which would include all the different types of ships which had impressed America. Models now at the museum include Jeff Davis' Ticonderoga and great English gallant of the type that defeated the Spanish Armada, and through the fighting ships of the (Continued from Page 2)

Varsity Boat Beats Last Year's Record In Last Week's Time Trial

The chances of Tech taking the heavyweight race will be very good, especially after the sensational time that her boat turned in last week. The varsity did not hit the water and the distance was covered in 5 minutes 24 seconds, which is 5 seconds better than the previous time.

The Tech basins will run an annual regatta in the spring. Prime candidates for the Tech crew will be announced shortly.
