Prof. Magoun (Continued from Page 1) that one out of six marriages ends in the divorce court, Professor Magoun gave at the Institute lecture on the three necessary criteria for a happy marriage: 1. Successful social adjustment. 2. The selection of the preparation for, and the obtaining of the right job. 3. The selection of the right lifetime partner.

While discussing how a person will know when he is in love, Professor Magoun said, "Human beings, like the elements, follow certain immutable laws, except that we know all about the elements, while we know very little about ourselves." Marriage is not for children, he continued. "It's too bad that real love doesn't announce itself like the measles with a rash."

As the theme of his lecture, Professor Magoun gave what in his consideration are the four fundamental prerequisites for a happy marriage. These are: 1) emotional stability, 2) mutual background and outlook, 3) mutual conformity of methods, and 4) mutual long-run sex attraction.
