Ten days later Russia declared war on Japan, and we all thought that things would be like wartime. Our opposite was grossly and slapping his face and quickly step-

On August 14 the end came. About seven in the evening the London Times ran the news of Japan's surrender. People dashed out into the streets. The V-1sers left the ship in more of a hurry than if it had been sailing. The whole world went wild that night, and even Tech suspended classes for a couple of days. However, the V-1sers were in by 10-P.M. unharmed. You could see them go in the front door at ten in a solid stream and then come out of the side door five minutes later in just as solid a stream.

Field Day

The Tech came out in red for the Field Day issue. Oscar predicted a Super victory and a score of 15-7. That was pretty good because the Tech had never been in the championship before in a field of eight teams. The opposition was tough but the Techs had the advantage of the wind. "

Once again the Tech announced a new issue on September 1 before the A.I.E.E. convention. This issue was called the A.I.E.E. issue and it was a real hit. The Techs had the advantage of the wind and the A.I.E.E. delegates had the advantage of the new issue.

During the A.I.E.E. convention, the Techs had the chance to show off their new issue. They had a table set up in the main lobby of the convention center and they distributed copies of the issue to the delegates. The Techs had a lot of fun and the delegates were very impressed with the Tech's new issue.

The Tech's success with the A.I.E.E. issue was due in part to the effective use of color. The Tech used a lot of color in this issue and it really helped to make the issue stand out. The Tech also used a lot of bold type and headlines to help draw attention to the different articles and news items.

The Tech continued to be successful with its issues throughout the rest of the year. The Tech's editors made sure to keep the focus on the Tech's students and their activities. The Tech was able to attract a lot of readers with its strong content and engaging style.
