LETTER SERIES

In the summer of 1944 there was active at the Institute a Class A Activity which called itself the Lecture Series Committee. Their purpose was to add more Technology, pertinent, professional interest and to try and broaden the average Techman's sense of national affairs. The only speaker that ever presented a talk under the auspices of this Committee was Reverend L. Saltonstall, then Governor of Massachusetts. Somehow or other the Committee then just seemed to fold up and die a premature death.

The end of the past term, however, a group of thinking students at the Institute, composed mostly of dormitory residents, decided that perhaps a revival of the defunct Committee would be in order now that the problems of peace, atomic control, etc., are staring everyone in the face.

On Wednesday the revitalized Committee presented their first speaker, Professor William L. Greene of the Department of English and History, who gave a talk titled "Can Nations Grow Up?" We hope that history won't repeat itself and that we will hear more of this Committee. A forum or round table discussion such as that presented by the T.C.A. last winter might be just the ticket.
