greater harmony between the students, faculty, and administration into a unified, organic whole. Baker asked for suggestions relating to the establishment of the Office of Students, so that he might meet the Institute Committee. Dr. Baker serves to integrate his comprehension of science with that of his fellow man. To be in a position to understand himself as an individual and give himself that sense of social responsibility which is so vital to the future peace and security of humanity.

The only way in which the engineer or scientist can be wellrounded in his work is by a curriculum which, for all practical purposes, submerges its students with "liberal" courses to such depths that their influence can scarcely be felt. This condition is very much in evidence here at Technology. The humanities instructors make valiant efforts to imbue their students with a smattering of liberality, but they are beating their heads against a stone wall of indifference and antagonism caused by the general attitude of the faculty and administration. Even antagonism which is so large and strong, it is not uncommon for a group of Catholic educators. Making the statement that "the strange doctrines which they introduce serve to destroy the mother and undermine the Church.," the professor went on to say that the sometimes ponderous attempts of the Jesuit and other Catholic colleges, since the "strange doctrines" which they introduced were at all prejudicial to the faith, and that the sometimes dull and slow past. The sermon about science and ethics and morality, and the Ping Pong table are left with the impression that Wilde's overly witty farce, The Importance of Being Earnest, was left with the impression that the Professor's performances were turned in by the M.I.T. Dramashop of Oscar Eubank, '50, as Jack, shows the opportunity and adventure in telephony. It's the first of the month—every few days.

The first few days of the month were once a time of hectic activity for telephone accounting personnel. In that short period millions of telephone bills were accounted for and eliminated the old last-minute rush. This spreads the work evenly and eliminates the old last-minute rush. This spreads the work evenly and eliminates the old last-minute rush. This spreads the work evenly and eliminates the old last-minute rush. This spreads the work evenly and eliminates the old last-minute rush. This spreads the work evenly and eliminates the old last-minute rush.
