of recreational facilities. Baseball, soccer and lacrosse fields and a quarter-mile cinder track and exercise. In addition to the popular athletics, and individually.

The athletics at the Institute was fostered by Major Briggs, who died in 1930 but was well known as the “Father of Tech athletics.” His son, Major Briggs Jr., was a member of the Track and Field team and an outstanding performer. The Briggs Field itself was named in his honor.

The New Hampshire Strath

This weekend marked the power of New Hampshire's athletic prowess. The Institute's team, led by seniors and sophomores, emerged victorious in the meet against Exeter College, 64-62. This marks the fifth victory of the season for the local forces.

Field House

A keen sportsman, a wise administrator, a wise counselor, and the founder of Tech athletics was Major Briggs, who died in 1930 but was well known as the “Father of Tech athletics.” His son, Major Briggs Jr., was a member of the Track and Field team and an outstanding performer. The Briggs Field itself was named in his honor.

The New Hampshire Strath

This weekend marked the power of New Hampshire's athletic prowess. The Institute's team, led by seniors and sophomores, emerged victorious in the meet against Exeter College, 64-62. This marks the fifth victory of the season for the local forces.