Job Prospects Good For Seniors, ButLittle Summer Work Available
Starting Salaries For B.S. Candidates Come To $200-$300 Monthly
By DAVID W. MCCROSSAN and KENNETH STERN
Graduating seniors will have $200-$300 and at least in industry this year, according to Professors Charles H. Tucker, placement officer of the Institute. Job opportunities are coming in at a rate described as "fast and furious." This increased demand for technical-trained men has caused a corresponding increase in beginning salaries offast and this situation will probably exist for the next six months, in Professor Tucker's opinion.
Here at the Institute there are about 1200 names on the list of recent graduates or those who are being more heavily besieged by "lateral search" from industrial companies. The great demand for men in electrical engineering, in particular, is due to increased manpower needs in the electronic industries, because of the increased speed of modern electronic computers.
In Professor Tucker's opinion, there is little danger of unemployment among the seniors, provided they are preparing for a possible worthwhile position by getting to know effective recruitment agencies and by advertising themselves.
This year, the majority of the job offers are coming from the electronics manufacturers, particularly those who have a large investment in research laboratories. The companies are preparing for a possible reorganization of their personnel, according to Professor Tucker.
