MANNERS, WHEREFORE ART THOU?

Two raised eyebrows are in order— one for the lack of manners demonstrated by quite a few Tech students at the recent Clayton lecture, the other for those Tech students who take it for granted that the new furniture in Walker Memorial has been treated.

As for the former, we can only express our disgust for any person who complacently sat through this lecture while elderly women were forced to stand. In another recent example a pregnant woman was forced to stand through a one-hour lecture on music attended by members of the student body and staff alike, all remained fixed in their positions. There is no reason that it should be; the important thing is that there be none.

There have been several complaints recently about petty misbehavior. As might be expected, technology is not the only school that has the same problems. It is well known that the Tech Show crew had to be towed across by a police launch while the crew valiantly went through all the motions of propelling the barge across.
