Hotels Already Booked For Big Prom Weekend

It's six weeks until the Junior Prom, but every hotel in Cambridge and Boston already is booked solid for the Junior Prom weekend.

The Commander has stopped taking names on its waiting list.

The Continental was filled up weeks before the first freshman arrived at Technology.

In Boston, the Myles Standish, the Sheraton, the Hita-Chariton, and the Towers have no rooms left. Even the Biltmore reported no vacancies. Of course, the fact that the Yale-Harvard game is to be held the same weekend has nothing to do with the situation.

they are almost the same thing. At this point, Lydia got up from the strange chair she was occupying and proceeded to demonstrate the "Mexican Shuffle," which she learned at camp from a Venezuelan student.

To Technology To Study

Last but definitely not least, was Joan Eleckstein. This fair femme has the distinction of having traveled the farthest of any of the co-eds to reach the shores of the muddy Charles. Joan is from Illinois, Michigan, and got plenty of "info" about Technology from her father, M.I.T. class of '19. Among other things, she has particular interest in public speaking, and has already joined the staff of WMT.

Again recalling the odd ratio of careers. so ade definitely asked me if I would consider marital duties. First I was greeted with blank faces, then Joan said, "if you think you're never going to be married, you're wrong!" At that, the girls all shouted agreement. Again recalling the odd ratio of males to females at Technology, I asked the girls if, even with their chances as definitely slim as they are, would consider marital duties. First I was greeted with blank faces, then Joan said, "If you think we NEVER would consider marital duties, you're wrong!" At that, the girls all shouted agreement. After this outburst, many of the girls said that they were not interested in Technology "only to study." Well, we've heard that one before.
