In a letter to the Editor on Tuesday, April 3, a Freshman resident of our campus has discussed the new open house rules. It is my feeling that for too long, many of us including this Freshman have looked at segments of a much larger picture and for that reason fail to appreciate the full significance of the open house rules—or, for that matter, the entire concept of the Institute and our relation to it.

It is my contention that all the discussion about the Dean's office, individual morals, "touchy problems," and the public...will not give a d--n are all symptoms of a much larger question that should be the concern of every member of the campus community—student and staff. The larger question to which I refer is simply, "What is the Institute, and what is its relation to us?"

The very foundations of the Institute rest on the realization of three primary objectives—"the education of men, the advancement of knowledge, and service to industry and the nation." In listing the objectives and policies of the Institute, President Killian continues, "realizing that the Institute trains for life and for citizenship, as well as for a career, its staff accept the responsibility of living in an area that many of the present unacceptably...for the purpose of being effective citizens. It is my contention that all the discussion about the Dean's office, individual morals, "touchy problems," and the public...will not give a d--n are all symptoms of a much larger question that should be the concern of every member of the campus community—student and staff. The larger question to which I refer is simply, "What is the Institute, and what is its relation to us?"

The very foundations of the Institute rest on the realization of three primary objectives—"the education of men, the advancement of knowledge, and service to industry and the nation." In listing the objectives and policies of the Institute, President Killian continues, "realizing that the Institute trains for life and for citizenship, as well as for a career, its staff accept the responsibility of living in an area that many of the present unacceptably...

Dear Sir:

In a letter to the Editor on Tuesday, April 3, a Freshman resident of our campus has discussed the new open house rules. It is my feeling that for too long, many of us including this Freshman have looked at segments of a much larger picture and for that reason fail to appreciate the full significance of the open house rules—or, for that matter, the entire concept of the Institute and our relation to it.

It is my contention that all the discussion about the Dean's office, individual morals, "touchy problems," and the public...will not give a d--n are all symptoms of a much larger question that should be the concern of every member of the campus community—student and staff. The larger question to which I refer is simply, "What is the Institute, and what is its relation to us?"

The very foundations of the Institute rest on the realization of three primary objectives—"the education of men, the advancement of knowledge, and service to industry and the nation." In listing the objectives and policies of the Institute, President Killian continues, "realizing that the Institute trains for life and for citizenship, as well as for a career, its staff accept the responsibility of living in an area that many of the present unacceptably...