AS SEEN FROM HERE
by DAVID N. WEBER

An impressive production of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" is currently on view at the Shattile Theatre. The riotously funny play within a play which Quin, Snout, Bottom and the rest present at the Duke's gallery proves once again that Shakespearean comedy is alive.

Fred Gwynne, whose masterful Bottom is the comic highlight of the show, adds a Penelope-Century touch to the part, which even the board of June would have found to his liking. Gwynne, incidentally, is also President of the Harvard Lampoon. The rest of the cast is

In the dim moment the other day we were planning through a blank, daily, and came across a headline, one word of which immediately caught our eye. The word was nimrod. In our naivety, we had always considered this word to be comparable to mumpsop, probable to start out in the same direction. Therefore, we thought it odd that such a word would appear in a headline, and consulted Noah Webster to the effect that perhaps we had been living all these years in ignorance. We had. Nimrod, it seems, was one of the sons of Chen, who is found on the pages of Genesis in the Old Testament. Furthermore, Nimrod was a hunter of note, as well as a ruler of diverse territories. However, it is his abilities with the weapons of his time that has perpetuated his name. As you have probably gathered, nimrod means a hunter. This
