The following is the text of an address by President J. R. Kilian, Jr., delivered to the Class of '56 in Rockefeller Chapel on September 18, 1952.

Members of the Class of '54:

Most hands showed signs of nervousness as President Kilian entered the hall. A large audience had gathered some minutes before the hour of his arrival and the atmosphere of expectancy was high. It was apparent that this would be a special occasion and that President Kilian would impart profound wisdom to his young audience. As he took his seat, the audience waited in silence, their eyes fixed on the man who had come to lead them.

On the platform, President Kilian began his address, speaking of the importance of the occasion. He emphasized the fact that the Class of '56 was a special group, one that had been invited to participate in the graduation ceremony. He spoke of the pride that he felt for his students and the confidence he had in their abilities.

"The Class of '56," he said, "is a special group, one that has been invited to participate in the graduation ceremony. This is a special occasion, and I am confident in your abilities." He went on to say that he hoped the students would make the most of this opportunity and that they would remember the lessons that he had imparted.

President Kilian then went on to discuss the importance of education and the role that it played in society. He spoke of the need for a high sense of expectancy tempered by forethought and patience. He emphasized the importance of the environment and the need to adjust to it as quickly as possible.

He spoke of the importance of freedom and the responsibilities it entails, and of the need to use this freedom wisely. He spoke of the need to be a part of a community and to be a part of the world. He spoke of the need to be a part of the world, and of the need to be a part of a community.

President Kilian concluded his address with a word of encouragement to the students. He said that they were not alone and that they had the support of their parents and the community. He said that they had the support of the world and that they had the support of the United States Navy. He concluded his address with a word of encouragement to the students and said that they were not alone and that they had the support of the world.

The students were moved by President Kilian's words and left the hall feeling inspired and motivated. They were ready to face the challenges of the future with confidence and determination.
