Things have not gone well on the sports fields of the Institute within the memory of any living man.

This rather sad fact recently drove one of the more melancholy members of our sports staff to delve back into the files of THE TECH for some one example, however remote in time, of an Institute victory on the field of sport.

Discovery of Manuscript

After much careful searching, our melancholy reporter emerged from the depths of the newspapers' archives, his face and arms covered with the accumulated scum of centuries. But his effort had not been in vain. With trembling hands he handled the following yellow and crumbling manuscript in the typewriter: (It was dated Nov. 20, 1881.)

"Football—At Exeter: Our team played its first game of the season with the Exeter 11 on Exeter, on Saturday, Oct. 29.

"The Exeters played well, and were superior to our men in passing, but infinitely inferior in rushing, kicking, and tackling; which is rather to be wondered at, considering our poor chances for practice and the good ones of Exeter."

(Editors note: Neither times nor scores are available from Professor John R. Coleman, room 52-243E. March 10 the manuscript to the typesetter: (It was discovered from the Institute and a trustee of Mount Holyoke College, spoke last Thursday, February 26, at a luncheon held on the college campus. The title of the address was "Open Scholarship's Opportunities."

"Behavioral Science" Awards Will Be Given

Students whose interest in psychology, sociology or anthropology has developed in their college careers are being offered support for graduate work in these subjects by the Ford Foundation.

The Behavioral Sciences Division of the Foundation has announced the inauguration of a limited and experimental program for graduate study in the behavioral sciences.

Available To Graduate Students

These fellowships are available only to graduate students who have not completed their undergraduate work. These special stipulations have not been made in order to limit the number of students whose undergraduate work has been concentrated in science or engineering. Instead, these stipulations have been made in order to allow students whose undergraduate work has been concentrated in science or engineering to receive special assistance in developing a program of graduate study.
