As a result, we ended the season at track 10. “Techmen know all the tricks,” we thought. But our searches for another gate were fruitless, so we were finally forced to fill up about half the station, we decided that track 14 was not the place for us. So we stationed ourselves at track 16. “Telemark know all the tricks,” we thought. But our dreams of getting on the train before the engineer were shattered when a railroad policeman came up to the gate from the other side, and with a sadistic grin shouted through the gate, “New York train on track 14,” and with a grand smile told the passengers they should board the train. We arrived in New York a mere twenty minutes after the train was supposed to leave. “Always On Time,” it read. “Merry Christmas, New Haven Railroad,” we said to ourselves, and proudly marched through the gate. —P.W.A.
