Robert A. Vogeler, '57, a prisoner and former officer of the Hungarian Communist party, and author of the book "I Was Stalin's Prisoner," spoke on the problem of Communism in this country, under the auspices of the Lecture Series Committee.

Mr. Vogeler began by describing his experience as a prisoner in a Hungarian Communist jail, and told of the book "I Was Stalin's Prisoner" spoken of at WMIT in the previous meeting. He then went on to discuss the problems of anti-communist activities in this country.

In response to a question asking him what he thought of the Senate McCarthy hearings, Mr. Vogeler pointed out that he had come back from Senegal McCarthy in Wisconsin last year, and that he had come back with an open mind. He told of the discussion that had taken place in the Senate, Mr. Vogeler elaborated on his stand for the next 20 minutes on several more questions on this topic, ranging from the floor. During this part of the lecture a number of people (estimated at about 250 of those present) were noticed to have left the lecture room. Although many of those who did have undoubtedly did so because of the intense heat, but only a slightly smaller number of them apparently walked out to register a protest against Mr. Vogeler's remarks.

When questioned as to the possibility of Senator McCarthy's actions in his investigation of Senator Webster's office of the New York Post, Mr. Vogeler said that he thought that Mr. Webster had never accused anyone of being a Communist party ideologue and had simply called them a Communist. Mr. Vogeler further stated that he had never accused anyone of being a Communist party ideologue, and that he had never made any such charges.

In closing, Mr. Vogeler stated that he felt that it was important for students to be aware of the dangers of Communism and to be prepared to deal with it. He also urged students to become involved in the fight against Communism, and to take an active part in the struggle for freedom.
