The perambulator

This is a new column. It probably will not last long. It is already too unconventional and this paper is too unconvincing. I am already too good as a design- er by assuring the reading of such a thing. For that reason I shall remain anonymous and hope that they do not uncover my identity.

The next week has been very try- ing. My attempt to grow a beard is failing in all sorts of comments, 109% derogatory. Some say it looks grimmer than usual, others say it looks uncharacteristic. I was already at low ebh. I reject that I don’t mind the lion, but the tails. “Big Jack” et al insist that if I don’t shave, they’ll shave it off, and maybe not any too gently. “Sir, the man you’re cutting has a beard... and maybe I’m probably not any too gently. Anyway I wouldn’t know how to do it, and maybe not any too gently. I guess all great artists must suffer, but why me?”

An overestimated vestige steadily decreases in a very serious problem, and I do have one! Congress has done it again. All they have to do is threaten an in- vestigation of the stock exchanges and down some baby, cradle, and all. On top of everything we can look forward to a big strike to this summer in the auto industry when the unions demand a new contract. If they get it, watch out, because inflation will soar. As for the first thing I will do will be to quit MIT and join their unions (as every able-bodied or able-minded person will do) so I can reap some of the benefits before the Congress prevents us from doing it. It’s more complicated on the U.S.S.R. As soon as I am a member I am going to lay off everything, and then sit back and let the money roll in. This money I intend to invest in Russian securities because this deal is allowed, it isn’t worth being long, brothers.

Our post office is getting a little hit of relatives and dangerous. If somebody doesn’t copy Cravik Gold, even conserva- tives ought to cooperate in a reality. For several years now they have re- moved all copies of Pravda which have been sent from, and this is not enough. The latest straw, and the one that may break the cam- ellia’s back is the banning of mailing “Lyzi strata” on the grounds of its being obscene and pornographic. I think everybody from Atriphonics (Continued on page 4)

You can achieve your full professional potential at ECA.

What you may have heard about ECA’s standards for technical personnel is true.

To some, these standards may seem exacting. To the exceptional man, however, a career with ECA can mean a refreshing lack of regimentation, preconceptions and other impediments to real creative activity. Graduate engineers associate closely with men who have made major contributions to their fields, and the atmosphere is one of technical realism, pioneering the new science of automatic control.

Among ECA’s projects are automatic controls on high industrial scale.

To keep pace with industry’s demand for more rapid developments in automatic control, ECA is enlarging its technical staff. Positions are open for graduates with a sound theoretical background, broad inerent knowledge, and a desire in our professional curiosity to work.

Beginning salaries range up to $3,000 per year.
