In the atmosphere of expectations generated by the MIT Conference on Selectivity and Discrimination in American Universities, Dr. Kenneth H. Gilchrist, president of the College of the Oxbridge Halls, said in his opening remarks, "To a great degree, we are dealing with a problem that has been present in our minds as we have observed and discussed the issue of selectivity and discrimination."

Dr. Killian and Dr. Frederick May Eliot Delivered Keynote Plenary Addresses

Dr. John Ely Burchard, Dean of MIT, delivered the keynote plenary address. In his address, he emphasized the importance of understanding the complex issue of selectivity and discrimination, stating, "We must recognize that the problem of discrimination is not only a social issue, but also a moral issue."

Conference Arrangements Very Smooth And Efficient

The conference arrangements were very smooth and efficient. The attendees were well accommodated, and the conference proceedings were well-organized. Dr. Killian, in his plenary address, praised the conference arrangements, stating, "The conference arrangements were excellent, and the attendees were well taken care of."
