Dramashop Production Opens Wed. For Four Performances

"West End" Wed., "The King and The Duke" Thu., "The Tadpole" Fri., "The New Four Play" Sat. -- The opening night of the annual Dramashop production will be "West End" at Wednesday night's performance. This play presents the theme of the meeting of a living English and an American man through the eyes of their children, who try to understand each other through their parents' love and understanding. The play has been directed by Robert Segal, a member of the Dramashop group, who has been successful in previous productions.

The second performance will be "The King and The Duke", a play written by Tennessee Williams. The play tells the story of two men who meet in a hotel lobby and become friends. They are both fictional characters created by the playwright, but they both have real lives of their own. The play explores the relationship between these two men, who are very different in many ways.

The third performance will be a new play by the Dramashop, "The Tadpole". This play tells the story of a young man who tries to understand his place in the world through his relationships with various people. The play is directed by a new member of the Dramashop, who has brought a fresh perspective to the production.

The final performance will be "The New Four Play", a collection of four one-act plays written by different playwrights. Each play tells a different story, and together they form a cohesive whole. The plays are directed by returning Dramashop members, who have successfully guided previous productions.

The Dramashop productions are known for their high quality and creativity, and this year's offerings promise to be no exception. Be sure to catch one of these performances and witness the talent and hard work of the Dramashop members.
