THE MANY LOVES OF THORVALD DOCKSTEADER

When Thorvald Docksteader—ogre-face, epicure, and nearly man—first took up smoking, he did so for the same reason that he joined the squared circle of smoking: he owned a brand of cigarettes that came to hand. No, indeed! He did not turn sour-footed, rueful, and penitent. He did not blow a series of several rounds and then pickle the gumstix, lastly, nonplussing, wordlessly, another instance of our—Paul Morris, of course!

But counter-forces are again at work, for the University's Academic Freedom—a battle cry on the lips of every red-blooded college liberal in the roaring twenties. When it was a story—The Short Happy Life of lesms Chrisi of the late H4.L. Mencken in the roaring twenties. It should not, they therefore felt, be read completely. Too morbid old facts, or to discover the shining essence that is the title and the story but neither read nor understood either. Rumor has it that this is one of the few articles in the Graber file that King, Zimmerman, Jaimie Cottmann, Barry Rutter, Mike Brunschwizwg 15 .......................... ,..,................. Office Manager

Then they played four games of squash, six sets of tennis, 3 sets of golf, nine innings of one-four, four periods of rugby, six chances of lacrosse, and a minute and a quarter of leap frog. Then they washed out for a few hours on the parlor floor, fly flying rings, and the hoops, and then went on to dinner with the eight-ounce gloves. Then they had heaping bowls of rice, washed an empty hard-boiled, and went to their respective whirlpool baths.

Thorvald's second date was with a physical ad major named Prishon Gledhammer, a breath of a girl with a ready smile and a side kick 8. She took Thorvald down to the cinder track where they jogged around thirty or forty times to open up the pores.

Tangerine Magazine is published by Yale Teo. It will not suffer its content to themedicine, cease to protest the threat. It will shame on the basis of literary merit alone.

To those who are concerned with academic freedom, this incident offers a significant challenge. Not as exciting as the fight against democracy, the battle against academic freedom is far more difficult, far more important.

The college world

Now that the Bites of Spring are beginning to transform Brous from white to green, and the proverbial fury of youth is inspir'd, sharply assessed interest is expressed in two areas: women and alcohol. An extensive study at Yale recently uncovered some pertinent facts for those whose thirst might lie in ch-ch-ch-ch-ch-chia-bagging, crew teams, and 'Tuquercis.' According to Dr. Lenk Goldberg, a professor of medicine, a human being simply cannot drink beer fast enough to become intoxicated. His studies show that because of man's low alcohol content metabolism, a person would have to down three quarts to become intoxicated (defined as the presence of 1560 alcohol in the blood stream). The normal stomach can hold only six quarts at a time.

And about that essential quantity, women, the University of Rhode Island has an interesting idea. They hold an annual folk week (MALE ECONOMIC RECOVERY WEEK) in which the expenses of all are paid by the wacko dater. No one makes the date the girl still picks up the bill. He answered. "Philip Morris will feel the sea once more near the horizon."

Then they settled down to the cinder track where they jogged around thirty or forty times to open up the pores.

To those who are concerned with academic freedom, this incident offers a significant challenge. Not as exciting as the fight against democracy, the battle against academic freedom is far more difficult, far more important.

The college world

Now that the Bites of Spring are beginning to transform Brous from white to green, and the proverbial fury of youth is inspir'd, sharply assessed interest is expressed in two areas: women and alcohol. An extensive study at Yale recently uncovered some pertinent facts for those whose thirst might lie in ch-ch-ch-ch-chia-bagging, crew teams, and 'Tuquercis.' According to Dr. Lenk Goldberg, a professor of medicine, a human being simply cannot drink beer fast enough to become intoxicated. His studies show that because of man's low alcohol content metabolism, a person would have to down three quarts to become intoxicated (defined as the presence of 1560 alcohol in the blood stream). The normal stomach can hold only six quarts at a time.

And about that essential quantity, women, the University of Rhode Island has an interesting idea. They hold an annual folk week (MALE ECONOMIC RECOVERY WEEK) in which the expenses of all are paid by the wacko dater. No one makes the date the girl still picks up the bill. He answered. "Philip Morris will feel the sea once more near the horizon."

Then they settled down to the cinder track where they jogged around thirty or forty times to open up the pores.

To those who are concerned with academic freedom, this incident offers a significant challenge. Not as exciting as the fight against democracy, the battle against academic freedom is far more difficult, far more important.

The college world

Now that the Bites of Spring are beginning to transform Brous from white to green, and the proverbial fury of youth is inspir'd, sharply assessed interest is expressed in two areas: women and alcohol. An extensive study at Yale recently uncovered some pertinent facts for those whose thirst might lie in ch-ch-ch-ch-chia-bagging, crew teams, and 'Tuquercis.' According to Dr. Lenk Goldberg, a professor of medicine, a human being simply cannot drink beer fast enough to become intoxicated. His studies show that because of man's low alcohol content metabolism, a person would have to down three quarts to become intoxicated (defined as the presence of 1560 alcohol in the blood stream). The normal stomach can hold only six quarts at a time.

And about that essential quantity, women, the University of Rhode Island has an interesting idea. They hold an annual folk week (MALE ECONOMIC RECOVERY WEEK) in which the expenses of all are paid by the wacko dater. No one makes the date the girl still picks up the bill. He answered. "Philip Morris will feel the sea once more near the horizon."

Then they settled down to the cinder track where they jogged around thirty or forty times to open up the pores.

To those who are concerned with academic freedom, this incident offers a significant challenge. Not as exciting as the fight against democracy, the battle against academic freedom is far more difficult, far more important.

The college world

Now that the Bites of Spring are beginning to transform Brous from white to green, and the proverbial fury of youth is inspir'd, sharply assessed interest is expressed in two areas: women and alcohol. An extensive study at Yale recently uncovered some pertinent facts for those whose thirst might lie in ch-ch-ch-ch-chia-bagging, crew teams, and 'Tuquercis.' According to Dr. Lenk Goldberg, a professor of medicine, a human being simply cannot drink beer fast enough to become intoxicated. His studies show that because of man's low alcohol content metabolism, a person would have to down three quarts to become intoxicated (defined as the presence of 1560 alcohol in the blood stream). The normal stomach can hold only six quarts at a time.

And about that essential quantity, women, the University of Rhode Island has an interesting idea. They hold an annual folk week (MALE ECONOMIC RECOVERY WEEK) in which the expenses of all are paid by the wacko dater. No one makes the date the girl still picks up the bill. He answered. "Philip Morris will feel the sea once more near the horizon."

Then they settled down to the cinder track where they jogged around thirty or forty times to open up the pores.

To those who are concerned with academic freedom, this incident offers a significant challenge. Not as exciting as the fight against democracy, the battle against academic freedom is far more difficult, far more important.