Previously, in the course of his studies, Professor Schmitt was successful in his aquatic venture. Professor Schmitt was one of three men in the regular MIT family who have had this title bestowed upon them. In this capacity, he devotes full time to his research activities.

During his tenure as Institute Professor, he has also become interested in nerve studies and recently took a trip to Chile for the purpose of capturing squid, a form of spineless mollusk whose nerve formation is particularly easy to study. Unlike Hemingway's famous fisherman, Professor Schmitt was successful in his aquatic venture.
