What is Higher Education's solution to the problems raised by an anticipated triale wave of applications and enrollments during the next few years? The answer may be found at the conference "Students Hold More Responsibility In New Financial System." This meeting will hear an impressive group of speakers, including Sen. Burnham, head of the Administration. At the conference, the Finance Board will meet at a time when the two issues are of great concern.

A new Tech constitution will be presented soon; it was prepared early this week. Coming as a result of a series of meetings of the Executive Committee of Inscomm and the paper's two-man managing board, the constitution will be read and explained for the first time at the publication's annual banquet Thursday night.

The Tech had not had a major constitutional revision in over fourteen years; according to editor John A. Friedman, the present constitution is outdated and therefore unsound in the light of present operating conditions. The new constitution is intended to be far-reaching and far-reaching, and to set the standards for future developments.

A daily paper must have its own printing facilities, and it must have a good staff, each of which handles two papers a week. Many daily college papers have been eliminated because of lack of funds. The first appropriation will be to determine how far the colleges can and should go toward accommodating their increased enrollment demands. It is argued that some solution must be found and that the new plan will be suggested at a Conference On Rising Enrollments held by MIT and the National Association of Student Administrators at the Institute in March.
