Robert Graves Reads His Work, Explains Poetic Theory Stand

Robert Graves, the well-known English poet, presented several of his poems last Friday evening at Kings Academy.

Introducing himself, Mr. Graves explained that he has had a varied education, and has lived in Spain since 1928—except for the war years. He feels that there are certain basic rules of poetry, and went on to state that he is in rebellion because I was one of the first people to recognize modern poets like T. S. Eliot.

Following is a letter written by Mr. Graves read after thirty poems. He said at the beginning of the readings, "I am sorry to say that all these poems are pretty horrible until later in my life, when I got a little happier."

Some of the poems which were received well were: "To Juan at the Winter Solstice", written when his son Juan was born, "Blue Fly," and "A Hymn of the Horse", a Peace of Cordelia's Wedding Cake."
