Course 9 Dropped; Will Become Part of Course 21 Program

The Institute will drop Course IX from its curriculum next year, according to Dean of Students John T. Rand. The course, which was a part of the new X-C, Science Teaching, has already become a part of Courses XXI, Humanities, and is in the direction of Prof. John M. Blum. The Undergraduate Policy Committee is currently studying ways of fitting Course XXI, X, and X-C into the Science and General Engineering, into Courses XXI.

Science teaching, a five-year course, has been concluded jointly with Harvard and Tufts this academic year. Students entering the course next term, however, will not attempt themselves to the program. Those presently in X-C will finish the year in the Harvard curriculum. The object of the course change is to allow students more freedom in making up their own schedules. By incorporating Course IX into Course XXI "the faculty is trying to work out a program similar in nature to Course IX such that a student wishing to deviate may do so under regulations not yet formulated by the Policy Committee," said Dean Rule.
