Walking home from the class, I was musing about the experiences of the students who had slept there before me. The dormitory was built in the late 1800s, and it has housed students from different eras. It's not as large as sleeping out on the lawn, but it's certainly more comfortable. One of the freshmen I met said, "The Navy was never like this." Some take a more neutral view, saying, "At least it's not as bad as sleeping out on the lawn." The suggestions for improvement put forth by the men involved are generally in reference to a few details. The most popular request was for a wider space to be provided for keeping personal property. Another item felt to be needed was some sort of mattress for the cot, and it was felt that as long as they had a place to sleep, the best they could expect was some planning to make the area habitable.

One of the surprising conditions of the men who have slept here is the strong sense of optimism and esprit de corps. They all expect to return to the situation next year, and many state that Dean Fassett is doing the best he can for them. However, there is still a large group of complainers that the men have about their condition.

Among the adverse conditions that the men have to contend with are collymbating cots, echoes in the gymnasium, and "uncomfortable." One remarked that the first time he saw the cots it reminded him of the Confederate hospital in the motion picture, "Gone With The Wind." One group who had spent three years in the Navy before coming here, said, "The Navy never stroked you like this." Some take a more neutral view, saying, "At least it's not as bad as sleeping out on the lawn." The suggestions for improvement put forth by the men involved are generally in reference to a few details. The most popular request was for a wider space to be provided for keeping personal property. Another item felt to be needed was some sort of mattress for the cot, and it was felt that as long as they had a place to sleep, the best they could expect was some planning to make the area habitable.

One of the surprising conditions of the men who have slept here is the strong sense of optimism and esprit de corps. They all expect to return to the situation next year, and many state that Dean Fassett is doing the best he can for them. However, there is still a large group of complainers that the men have about their condition.

Among the adverse conditions that the men have to contend with are collymbating cots, echoes in the gymnasium, and "uncomfortable." One remarked that the first time he saw the cots it reminded him of the Confederate hospital in the motion picture, "Gone With The Wind." One group who had spent three years in the Navy before coming here, said, "The Navy never stroked you like this." Some take a more neutral view, saying, "At least it's not as bad as sleeping out on the lawn."