EDUCATION SERVICE

milles was established at MIT in 1906 when President James R. Kil- lian, Jr., and Dr. Harold Zacharias, Professor of Physics, called together a distinguished group of scientists to seek ways in which the teaching of physics in secondary schools could best meet the challenge of the Twenty-Third Century. The Committee set as its overall goal to develop and to make available new techniques for the teaching of science. It now has headquarters at Watertown, Mass., including a studio in which motion pictures are being made. The program also includes the preparation of a new textbook, the development of do-it-yourself laboratory apparatus, and the writing of numerous paper-bound books to intertrest young people in various tech-ical areas of scientific study.

During the past two years several hundred high school teachers in physics have been trained in the aims and methods of this new curricu-mum. One day some 15,000 students will be taught the new program.
