SAE, Betas, Fijis, Delts, Spirited Discussion in Boat Meeting

The undergraduates numbers of the Boat Society, the Maritime Association, and the Bostonian Society, with their "honorary alumni" members for the year, came together in the Junior Club House to discuss the actual functions of the group and how they might better serve the MIT community.

The discussion opened when Professor Theodore Wood, an accomplished gentleman, proposed that some means be found for utilizing the social tastes of a larger number of the student body for the benefit of the group. He had visited one of the fraternities during the evening, and was disturbed by the fact that many of the students had not been involved in music, but had had little or no interest in the arts. He cited examples in which he strongly supported the role of the arts in student life and the need for more involvement from the general student body.

Harrell, Williams, Betas, and Fijis were the groups to have the most regulation and competition, leading to a lively debate. The meetings will be held on the Triangles, starting Sunday, at 3:00 P.M.

The ball "A"赛季 ended on November 4, with a 29-0 victory over Delta Lepassing Guessers I through III respectively.

The Division A schedule pits SAE against the Delta Lepassing Guessers I through III respectively.

The SAE Redevelopment Committee has been trying for the past several weeks to get the students interested in the campus activities. This week, they held a "Carnival of Religion," where students could come to learn about different religions and their practices.

Several groups, including SAE, Betas, and Fijis, have started organizing events for the upcoming Carnival of Religion, which will be held on November 17. The Carnival will feature booths from every fraternity, cargo, and band, as well as speakers on various topics related to religion.

One suggestion that did receive favorable attention was the idea of having "honorary alumni" members for the year. According to Professor Wood, this would not only encourage more students to participate, but also foster more of the "Mit" spirit among the general student body.

The first Carnival of Religion was held last year, and it was a great success. This year, the organizers hope to attract more students and make the event even more enjoyable.

Student Interest in Musical Clubs Brings Spirited Discussion in Boat Society Meeting

The undergraduates numbers of the Boat Society, the Maritime Association, and the Bostonian Society, with their "honorary alumni" members for the year, came together in the Junior Club House to discuss the actual functions of the group and how they might better serve the MIT community.

The discussion opened when Professor Theodore Wood, an accomplished gentleman, proposed that some means be found for utilizing the social tastes of a larger number of the student body for the benefit of the group. He had visited one of the fraternities during the evening, and was disturbed by the fact that many of the students had not been involved in music, but had had little or no interest in the arts. He cited examples in which he strongly supported the role of the arts in student life and the need for more involvement from the general student body.

Harrell, Williams, Betas, and Fijis were the groups to have the most regulation and competition, leading to a lively debate. The meetings will be held on the Triangles, starting Sunday, at 3:00 P.M.

The ball "A"赛季 ended on November 4, with a 29-0 victory over Delta Lepassing Guessers I through III respectively.

The Division A schedule pits SAE against the Delta Lepassing Guessers I through III respectively.

The SAE Redevelopment Committee has been trying for the past several weeks to get the students interested in the campus activities. This week, they held a "Carnival of Religion," where students could come to learn about different religions and their practices.

Several groups, including SAE, Betas, and Fijis, have started organizing events for the upcoming Carnival of Religion, which will be held on November 17. The Carnival will feature booths from every fraternity, cargo, and band, as well as speakers on various topics related to religion.

One suggestion that did receive favorable attention was the idea of having "honorary alumni" members for the year. According to Professor Wood, this would not only encourage more students to participate, but also foster more of the "Mit" spirit among the general student body.

The first Carnival of Religion was held last year, and it was a great success. This year, the organizers hope to attract more students and make the event even more enjoyable.