Morton's Statement, Morton's Salt

"I deny categorically the baseless rumors, dormant inspired by under graduates, chemists and guided-middlemen grease monkeys, that I am, nor have been, secretly employed by Robert Hall Clothes, Inc. My report in the December Atlantic was a spontaneous gesture intended to assist the efforts of the Charles River Basin Improvement Society, and to allay the uneasiness felt by citizens in general, concerning MIT students on the Harvard Bridge."

Charles Morton ironically has pointed out one of the basic problems of our age. While he intended in general, encountering MIT students, to allay the uneasiness felt by citizens of a tradition bound, prep school, he was in 1900. Mr. Morton does not realize the dependence our society has upon the grease monkey as he was in Madras.

His conception of the present generation is so antiquated by the facts of life as to ridicule the MIT student, his state problems of our age. While he intended in general, encountering MIT students, to allay the uneasiness felt by citizens of a tradition bound, prep school, he was in 1900. Mr. Morton does not realize the dependence our society has upon the grease monkey as he was in Madras.

His conception of the present generation is so antiquated by the facts of life as to ridicule the MIT student, his state problems of our age. While he intended in general, encountering MIT students, to allay the uneasiness felt by citizens of a tradition bound, prep school, he was in 1900. Mr. Morton does not realize the dependence our society has upon the grease monkey as he was in Madras.

His conception of the present generation is so antiquated by the facts of life as to ridicule the MIT student, his state problems of our age. While he intended in general, encountering MIT students, to allay the uneasiness felt by citizens of a tradition bound, prep school, he was in 1900. Mr. Morton does not realize the dependence our society has upon the grease monkey as he was in Madras.