Fall in Temporary Quarters

Lack of Space Causes Dilemma

In addition to the problems of adjusting to college life, freshmen at MIT have been forced to live in a temporary housing arrangement due to a lack of space on campus. This year, the freshmen have been placed in various dormitories throughout the New England area, including places like Lowell House and Baker House. The situation is expected to last for the remainder of the fall semester, according to Dr. J. B. Wilbur, head of the Dean's Office.

Senior House Has New Housemaster

The senior house, Burton House, has welcomed its new housemaster, Mr. David Vilkomerson, '60. The position of housemaster is an important one, as it is responsible for the daily operations of the house and the welfare of its members. Mr. Vilkomerson has been a member of the MIT community for several years and is well-known for his leadership on campus. His appointment is expected to bring a sense of stability and continuity to the senior house.

Dutch Athletic Center Boosts Sports Programs

Athletically minded members of the MIT community will surely welcome the opening of the new Dutch Athletic Center. Inspired by the increasing popularity of the center, the student body has expressed its desire for a more comprehensive sports facility. The center is expected to offer a wide range of activities, from swimming and weightlifting to basketball and tennis. The new facility will certainly enhance the athletic experience for MIT students.
