In its argument, Dover Club pointed up the opinion that “In relation to the general public, the UAP's responsibility is to act as the general public's agent, and not to act in the best interest of any one individual or small group.”

Grossman stated that he had been urged to run by several people whose opinion he deeply respects. He said that “preventing committees to become subcommittees of IFC or any other organization would almost certainly prevent me from being elected.”

Compulsory Commons
Citing that the "UAP’s responsibility is to bring any student problems to the attention of school administration," Grossman stated that the proposed compulsory commons would prevent this. "It seems to me that the commons are a nucleus for student stimulation and the administration. Grossman added: "However, because the UAP has the position of its own, and is not promiscuous, it is able to give more effective help to individuals and students who are interested in the schools and the facilities available on campus."
