Killian on Technology Future
Stratton to Speak on MIT Role

"Today the Free World holds a position of leadership in science and technology. The United States will continue to lead the way to further peak performance gains more precisely. These are the words of Dr. James E. Killian Jr., Chairman of the MIT Corporation, who delivered an address to the International Congress of Scientific Management at its 12th annual meeting in Sydney, Australia.

Professor Emeritus Ervin H. Schell, of the School of Industrial Management also attended the conference in his capacity as first Chairman of the International Academy of Management, an ad hoc group formed to represent the U.S.

Exponential Growth in Science

Dr. Killian lectured on "The Growing Edge of Innovation." He stressed the need for industry's anticipation of scientific knowledge accompanied by a swift technological change and industry's need to improve its products through more sophisticated production methods.

Henry A. James, a professor of mechanical engineering at MIT, said that the contributions of American engineering schools are still very limited, and that the ability of American engineering schools to make the contributions needed is limited as well.

Proper Environment

In the discussion following the Killian lecture, industry and government must develop policies that are appropriate for the proper environment. They must provide opportunities for new creative ideas and new directions. They must remain sensitive to the principles and ideas that the student should never develop second-to-first.
