The celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology was held over the week of April 9th to 15th amid speeches, discussions, music, and pageantry. The week was set as a celebration of MIT and its achievements.

The program has made arrangements for lodging and for the convenience of the guest. Prior to assuming a role in the school system, the senior graduate will fly to a special instruction in Ceylonese language and history, and the most effective means of instruction in English and the sciences in foreign countries. The students will have the opportunity of serving a second year during their last two years in Ceylon. They will be given the chance to participate in other activities in the small nation.

The project is currently being carried out by the Peace Corps in Washington, D.C., which is providing the necessary funds and support. There is agreement that drastic changes must be made in the education of the people of a number of countries, particularly in underdeveloped areas.

The government gives aid to 3000 students, but in many cases it is not being effectively utilized. The author concludes that drastic changes must be made in the education of the people of a number of countries, and that the only effective way to achieve this is through the Peace Corps.

The text concludes with a note about the importance of education in underdeveloped countries, and the need for a greater focus on understanding the cultural and social context of these regions. The text emphasizes the importance of collaboration and the need for a greater understanding of the complexities of these regions.

The final sentence of the text reads: "The government gives aid to 3000 students, but in many cases it is not being effectively utilized. The author concludes that drastic changes must be made in the education of the people of a number of countries, and that the only effective way to achieve this is through the Peace Corps."