The Weavers Bring Folk Music To MIT

A capacity crowd flowed into Krenge Auditorium last Saturday evening to hear The Weavers in a concert of "Folk Songs Around the World." The members of the folk-singing group are Lee Hays, Fred Hellerman, Ronnie Gilbert, and Erik Darling (who began singing and playing with the group about two years ago when Pete Seeger decided to begin singing on his own).

The Weavers started off the evening's entertainment with aousing version of "When the Saints Go Marching in," followed by many familiar American folk songs, foreign folk songs, and members which were not quite folk songs.

Lee Hays handled most of the announcing, while adding a story now-and-then, from his life in Arkansas. Instrumentation is done by Fred Hellerman (piano) and Erik Darling (banjo and guitar).

Folksun fun at many institutions is a folk-technique used by The Weavers, and which is very successful for them. One member of the group did a satire on revivals, with Erik Darling playing a sick-morning trumpet while Ronnie Gilbert expounded on how she had been saved the week before.

An interview was held after the show by WVITS and which should be broadcast sometime in the next two weeks.
