A Scenario-writing Contest for the 1962 show was announced in The Tech Show Swole held at Kresge Auditorium Monday night by Mike Piatt, General Manager of "Tech Show 1962." Any member of the MIT Community may submit an entry. If the winning writer's scenario is used, he will be given program credits and possibly the option to write the entire show.

Alt Subjects, Open

In addition, Platt offered a $50 prize for any scenario used. The scenario may be on any subject, and should include a complete plot outline, a list of characters, scenes, and musical numbers, and any other pertinent information. The script for the show, to be produced this spring, will be written from this scenario.

"Tech Show" is an original musical production each year, written, composed, and directed entirely by MIT students. Male roles in the "Tech Show" cast are filled by men from MIT, while female roles are open to anyone in the area. Tech Shows have played to MIT audiences since the original production in 1968.

Good Script Essential

Platt feels that opening the scenario writing to any member of MIT will encourage student interest and participation in this year's show, as well as increasing the probability of writing a superior script. "We have found that any given Tech Show's success or failure is dependent primarily upon the quality of the script," said Platt. "Many college musicals fail because of too much local humor, many disjointed episodes, and lack of unification. A good solid plot is essential."
