Union Library

The reference card says "Rotch". The book is somewhere on the other side of the Institute in Building Seven. Is it worth the walk? Probably, but then all the other references are here in Hayden. This is a discouraging situation; at its worst it can mean a reference missed which could be essential to the research.

MIT has five divisional libraries and a number of smaller libraries masquerading as reading rooms. Frequently these smaller collections are outside the jurisdiction of the library administration, so their actions aren't even catalogued in Hayden.

What does this mean for the student who is trying to gather research materials but does not know all the intricacies of the library system? To find many works has been looked over in the preparation of a paper because the individual did not or could not find all the material he sought? What does this mean for the student whose collection is not catalogued? How many works have been overlooked in the preparation of a thesis? How many works have been overlooked in the preparation of a symposion? How many works have been overlooked in the preparation of a paper because the individual did not or could not find all the material he sought?

It seems far more important that the engineering and science collections be under the same roof than that the humanities and science collections be together. Even this separation would not be the ideal, but it is an interim suggestion worth serious consideration.

Union Library

Books in Works-in-Progress and papers not yet catalogued are available in the Union Library. This is a branch library that has been established as a library service for faculty and student staff of the building. The library is located in the basement of the building and is open from 8:00 AM to 10:00 PM. Students and faculty can access the library by showing their ID cards. The library is equipped with workstations, printers, and copiers for the convenience of the users.

Letters to the Tech

Compliance or Betrayal: A Letter to the Dean

The Tech has been awarded third place in collegiate news organization sponsored by the New England District Council of the American Newspaper Guild. The committee, judging a total of 21 newspapers in the region for the second straight year, and the Boston University News was voted the best college newspaper in the region, for the second straight year, and the Boston University News was voted the best college newspaper in the region, for the second straight year. The Boston University News was voted the best college newspaper in the region, for the second straight year.

Dean Wadleigh's Position

Dean Wadleigh's letter to the editor of the Tech is an important statement on the current state of the institution. He writes:

"I am pleased to see that the Tech administration is making efforts to improve the quality of its publications. The Tech has been consistently ranked as one of the best student newspapers in the country, and I believe that this ranking is well deserved.

The Tech is a student-run newspaper, and I fully support the right of students to express their opinions freely. However, I would like to see the Tech take a more consistent approach to its coverage of campus events. While I believe that the Tech should be free to report on any event that occurs on campus, I think it is important to avoid sensationalism and to present a balanced view of the events.

I am also concerned about the Tech's coverage of academic issues. The Tech has the opportunity to provide a valuable service to the student body by reporting on important academic issues, but I think it is important that the Tech cover these issues in a responsible manner.

In conclusion, I believe that the Tech administration is making progress in improving the quality of its publications. However, I think it is important that the Tech continue to make efforts to provide a balanced and responsible coverage of campus events and academic issues.

Dean Wadleigh"
