Summer Selling Banned: Technique And Quiz Books Affected By New Ruling

For the first time this year all mail sent a freshman prior to registration day had to be approved by the Freshman Coordinating Committee. Associate Dean of Student Affairs Robert J. Holden.

After several controversies surrounding the pre-school sale of the Walker Quiz Books is by now a familiar routine, freshmen last year were told not to make an evaluation of policy concerning the book. This ban took part as part of a broader study of entrepreneurship at MIT.

A motion passed by In accordance with March 29 provided that all mail sent to freshmen, and for reservation before registration date must be approved by the FCC or its designee.

As Bill Pinkerton, FCC chairman, explained, by the same time the average freshman has waded through all the fraternities and dormitory information and the registration material, he doesn’t really have time to do with the other miscellaneous letters he may receive.

Not being familiar with MIT life, he’s not in a position to judge the usefulness of items or services advertised for sale.

After further discussion at the Executive Committee issued a statement June 10 prohibiting any and all campus advertising by outside organizations.

Dean Holden and Larry Halber, Assistant to the Dean of Students Affairs, checked over all materials submitted to them under the new ruling.

According to Bishoff, several of the freshmen groups who were around during the summer, pre-registered last Fall before the beginnings of the Secretariat, and Peter Von Pinkerson also saw most of the problems.

As a result of the new policy, the freshmen groups will be able to put on the campus this summer’s weekend options.

A statement by the Tech Book Fair, was made by Bebee Bebee in a statement last year.
