Gunshot Victim Found In Charles; River Pollution Noted In Autopsy

The body of Edward J. Stasz, Cambridge ascoturer, was found floating in the Charles River Sunday near the Charlestown Yacht Club, just downstream of Longfellow Bridge.

Medical examiner Dr. Michael Lamoit said Stasz had died from a .22 caliber bullet wound. A point of blood, while bloody smudges covered the dead man's face and the adjacent door.

Stasz had lived at various times in Cambridge, Somerville, and Arlington, working at one time for a Cambridge roofing firm. He had a long record of arrests, beginning at the age of 15, and had served time in Concord Reformatory. He was sentenced to 12 to 16 years in Walpole State Prison for unarmed robbery in 1955, being transferred that December to Concord. At the time of his death he was on parole from the latter institution.

Repairs And Construction on Schedule

By Tom Meagh

Extensive construction work on the women's dormitory and the married students' housing project, renovation of parts of the established dormitories, and the partial installation of a dial telephone system in the East Campus high-lighted the summer's activities in the residential sections of MIT.

Construction of the new women's dormitory on Mt. Auburn St., opposite Lowell House, will house 115 coeds, a faculty resident and his family, and foot- guards. It will feature study cubicles in addition to the recent, a class study lounge in the main house, a large dining room with meals served seven days a week, and a kitchenette on each floor. The $2,000,000 building was made possible by the generous donation of Mrs. Stanley McCormick of Boston.

Applications To Be Accepted

Applications for the married students' housing project will be accepted late this fall, although the project will not be completed until next summer. With the exception of the women's work, the four 2½ story buildings are complete, and the History main building is going up rapidly. The new dormitories, which will be open next fall, will provide 60 double bedroom apartments in the four small buildings, and 60 one-bedroom and 56 efficiency apartments in the main building, providing 210 apart- ments for some of MIT's more than 1000 married students.

The $2,000,000 project is fi- nanced through a $500,000 loan from the Federal Housing and Home Finance Administration. This 40-year loan will be paid off from the receipts of the apartments.

The prominent feature of the housing project will be a small variety store, the only of its kind on the campus, which will sell essential grocery items to prevent need- less trips to distant super- markets. Although it will not re- place the campus stores, it will serve to provide most of the es-
