Letters to the Editor

REVERED BUDDHIST

To the Editor:
In response to your suggestion that I comment on the recent Buddhist Council findings after observing a monastic ceremony, I believe that the true essence of the monastic life is not just in the ceremonial rituals themselves, but in the inner transformation that occurs within the practitioner. The practice of meditation and the cultivation of wisdom are central to the Buddhist tradition, and these practices are not limited to any particular geographical location or cultural context.

Sincerely,
[Your Name]

Kibitzer

BRIGHT FRESHMEN

Members of the present Freshman Class have received advanced credit for 90 MIT subjects. When more than one-fourth of an incoming class has received advanced standing in normal freshman subjects, special consideration is given to see that these students get a fair start at MIT. A special effort is being made to see that Freshmen receive proper assistance from their faculty advisors.

Consideration must be subject to constant review and action, and the Department has taken in the recent report of 18.01-18.05 must be forthcoming.

New ideas for instruction must be tested. As for example: Undergraduate Seminar Program has been expanded this year. In other cases, advanced sections must be provided for those students who have high aptitude and show promise, and who did not find their high school background in individual subjects.

NDEA 11

The House of Representatives has cleared the path for the removal of the “disclaimer clause” from both the National Defense Education Act and the National Science Foundation Act. Considering President Kennedy’s dislike of the “disclaimer clause,” perhaps it was not a surprise that the Senate, no opposition is expected from the House of Representatives. The removal of the clause should open the benefits of the Act to many of the students who have been excluding benefits by their own convictions. University policy is to make it illegal for any member of a Communist-controlled organization to accept any of the benefits of these Acts.

Letters to the Editor

REVERED BUDDHIST

To the Editor:
In response to your suggestion that I comment on the recent Buddhist Council findings after observing a monastic ceremony, I believe that the true essence of the monastic life is not just in the ceremonial rituals themselves, but in the inner transformation that occurs within the practitioner. The practice of meditation and the cultivation of wisdom are central to the Buddhist tradition, and these practices are not limited to any particular geographical location or cultural context.

Sincerely,
[Your Name]

Kibitzer

BRIGHT FRESHMEN

Members of the present Freshman Class have received advanced credit for 90 MIT subjects. When more than one-fourth of an incoming class has received advanced standing in normal freshman subjects, special consideration is given to see that these students get a fair start at MIT. A special effort is being made to see that Freshmen receive proper assistance from their faculty advisors.

Consideration must be subject to constant review and action, and the Department has taken in the recent report of 18.01-18.05 must be forthcoming.

New ideas for instruction must be tested. As for example: Undergraduate Seminar Program has been expanded this year. In other cases, advanced sections must be provided for those students who have high aptitude and show promise, and who did not find their high school background in individual subjects.

NDEA 11

The House of Representatives has cleared the path for the removal of the “disclaimer clause” from both the National Defense Education Act and the National Science Foundation Act. Considering President Kennedy’s dislike of the “disclaimer clause,” perhaps it was not a surprise that the Senate, no opposition is expected from the House of Representatives. The removal of the clause should open the benefits of the Act to many of the students who have been excluding benefits by their own convictions. University policy is to make it illegal for any member of a Communist-controlled organization to accept any of the benefits of these Acts.

Letters to the Editor

REVERED BUDDHIST

To the Editor:
In response to your suggestion that I comment on the recent Buddhist Council findings after observing a monastic ceremony, I believe that the true essence of the monastic life is not just in the ceremonial rituals themselves, but in the inner transformation that occurs within the practitioner. The practice of meditation and the cultivation of wisdom are central to the Buddhist tradition, and these practices are not limited to any particular geographical location or cultural context.

Sincerely,
[Your Name]

Kibitzer

BRIGHT FRESHMEN

Members of the present Freshman Class have received advanced credit for 90 MIT subjects. When more than one-fourth of an incoming class has received advanced standing in normal freshman subjects, special consideration is given to see that these students get a fair start at MIT. A special effort is being made to see that Freshmen receive proper assistance from their faculty advisors.

Consideration must be subject to constant review and action, and the Department has taken in the recent report of 18.01-18.05 must be forthcoming.

New ideas for instruction must be tested. As for example: Undergraduate Seminar Program has been expanded this year. In other cases, advanced sections must be provided for those students who have high aptitude and show promise, and who did not find their high school background in individual subjects.

NDEA 11

The House of Representatives has cleared the path for the removal of the “disclaimer clause” from both the National Defense Education Act and the National Science Foundation Act. Considering President Kennedy’s dislike of the “disclaimer clause,” perhaps it was not a surprise that the Senate, no opposition is expected from the House of Representatives. The removal of the clause should open the benefits of the Act to many of the students who have been excluding benefits by their own convictions. University policy is to make it illegal for any member of a Communist-controlled organization to accept any of the benefits of these Acts.

Letters to the Editor

REVERED BUDDHIST

To the Editor:
In response to your suggestion that I comment on the recent Buddhist Council findings after observing a monastic ceremony, I believe that the true essence of the monastic life is not just in the ceremonial rituals themselves, but in the inner transformation that occurs within the practitioner. The practice of meditation and the cultivation of wisdom are central to the Buddhist tradition, and these practices are not limited to any particular geographical location or cultural context.

Sincerely,
[Your Name]

Kibitzer

BRIGHT FRESHMEN

Members of the present Freshman Class have received advanced credit for 90 MIT subjects. When more than one-fourth of an incoming class has received advanced standing in normal freshman subjects, special consideration is given to see that these students get a fair start at MIT. A special effort is being made to see that Freshmen receive proper assistance from their faculty advisors.

Consideration must be subject to constant review and action, and the Department has taken in the recent report of 18.01-18.05 must be forthcoming.

New ideas for instruction must be tested. As for example: Undergraduate Seminar Program has been expanded this year. In other cases, advanced sections must be provided for those students who have high aptitude and show promise, and who did not find their high school background in individual subjects.

NDEA 11

The House of Representatives has cleared the path for the removal of the “disclaimer clause” from both the National Defense Education Act and the National Science Foundation Act. Considering President Kennedy’s dislike of the “disclaimer clause,” perhaps it was not a surprise that the Senate, no opposition is expected from the House of Representatives. The removal of the clause should open the benefits of the Act to many of the students who have been excluding benefits by their own convictions. University policy is to make it illegal for any member of a Communist-controlled organization to accept any of the benefits of these Acts.

Letters to the Editor

REVERED BUDDHIST

To the Editor:
In response to your suggestion that I comment on the recent Buddhist Council findings after observing a monastic ceremony, I believe that the true essence of the monastic life is not just in the ceremonial rituals themselves, but in the inner transformation that occurs within the practitioner. The practice of meditation and the cultivation of wisdom are central to the Buddhist tradition, and these practices are not limited to any particular geographical location or cultural context.

Sincerely,
[Your Name]

Kibitzer

BRIGHT FRESHMEN

Members of the present Freshman Class have received advanced credit for 90 MIT subjects. When more than one-fourth of an incoming class has received advanced standing in normal freshman subjects, special consideration is given to see that these students get a fair start at MIT. A special effort is being made to see that Freshmen receive proper assistance from their faculty advisors.

Consideration must be subject to constant review and action, and the Department has taken in the recent report of 18.01-18.05 must be forthcoming.

New ideas for instruction must be tested. As for example: Undergraduate Seminar Program has been expanded this year. In other cases, advanced sections must be provided for those students who have high aptitude and show promise, and who did not find their high school background in individual subjects.

NDEA 11

The House of Representatives has cleared the path for the removal of the “disclaimer clause” from both the National Defense Education Act and the National Science Foundation Act. Considering President Kennedy’s dislike of the “disclaimer clause,” perhaps it was not a surprise that the Senate, no opposition is expected from the House of Representatives. The removal of the clause should open the benefits of the Act to many of the students who have been excluding benefits by their own convictions. University policy is to make it illegal for any member of a Communist-controlled organization to accept any of the benefits of these Acts.

Letters to the Editor

REVERED BUDDHIST

To the Editor:
In response to your suggestion that I comment on the recent Buddhist Council findings after observing a monastic ceremony, I believe that the true essence of the monastic life is not just in the ceremonial rituals themselves, but in the inner transformation that occurs within the practitioner. The practice of meditation and the cultivation of wisdom are central to the Buddhist tradition, and these practices are not limited to any particular geographical location or cultural context.

Sincerely,
[Your Name]