College World

“College World” reported last week that Delta Upsilon Fraternity at University of British Columbia is planning a petition protesting the naming of the new, privately-owned fraternity house as a “house of prostitution.” The fraternity blasted the plan, in particular, of repeated raids and relentless night parades.

Since then, the Vancouver city council has been forced to reconsider. The Vancouver organization has been backed into a corner by the University, the fraternity, and the City Council.

To be fair, Delta Upsilon members were shocked to see the fraternity house under attack. They had assumed that the house would be a private residence, not a public place of business.

A similar protest was reported last week in New York City, where the fraternities were protesting the naming of a fraternity house as a “house of prostitution.” The fraternity blasted the plan, in particular, of repeated raids and relentless night parades.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Reader:

I hope you will read this letter carefully. It is not easy to write a letter about something that is so personal and private. But I think it is important to let everyone know what I am feeling.

The most important thing for me to say is that I am deeply upset by the recent events at the University of British Columbia. I believe that the University administration is not doing enough to protect the rights of the students and to ensure a safe and respectful environment for everyone.

I have been a student at the University of British Columbia for two years now, and I have been a member of the Delta Upsilon Fraternity for three years. I have always been proud to be a member of this organization, and I have always felt that it was important to uphold the values of the fraternity, which are to promote scholarship, leadership, and good character.

However, the events of last week have made me realize that there are serious problems with the way in which the fraternity is being run. I believe that the University administration needs to take immediate action to address these issues, and to ensure that the rights of the students are protected.

I hope that you will consider this letter, and that you will take the time to think about the issues that I have raised. I believe that it is important to speak out about these matters, and to work together to find solutions.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]
