'Escape From East Berlin' At Pilgrim
By Gilberto Ponce-Gallierico

"Escape From East Berlin" is not just another escape story.
It is something more than an escape film. Directed beautifully and professionally by Robert Stone ("Paradise, Lost"), it deals with the emotions of twenty-eight people from West Berlin to escape to the East. Admittedly, the film isn't brilliant, but it is not overdone; no character is overplayed.

The first half-hour is perhaps the best in the film. The sequence of the girl thoughtlessly trying to escape across the Berlin Wall being pulled back from a sure death by a friend, then chased by the Communist police, is always breathtaking.

Stone's subtle and talented combination of montage and a slow camera movement is emotionally effective, creating a constant tension. Then the film declines somewhat. The sec-dond half-hour is never too interesting. Not until the climax does the film come anywhere near its earliest heights; the scene of the escape through the tunnel is indeed well done; but montage builds up the tension; a close-moving shot across the tunnel into West Berlin creates a sense of hard-won freedom.

There are some weaknesses. The script is deficient in one manner. The first: the film is in a nearly-farce, a style of scene that is not always suitable to the plot. The second: the plotting of the story is obvious;

For tough & regular beards
For sensitive skin
