For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.

For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.

For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.

For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.

For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.

For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.

For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.

For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.

For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.

For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.

For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.

For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.

For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.

For Study Abroad
Inscomm Recommends Expanded Foreign Opportunities Program

The Inscomm Executive Committee has recommended to the MIT community the expansion of the Foreign Opportunities Program to allow a greater number of undergraduate students to study abroad.

According to the offices of Inscomm, Departments, and Foreign Students’ Advisors, there is a need for further opportunities in the existing programs. Numerous students have expressed interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT students have indicated interest in studying abroad. A number of MIT departments have indicated interest in the idea of sending students abroad, according to the present Inscomm Committee. Because of the interest in the course content, different departments would recommend different foreign countries. For example, some departments might recommend going to the United Kingdom, while others might recommend going to Japan.