Instruments stolen from Kresge

Five musical instruments have been stolen from the Kresge Auditorium instrument room this year. The instruments—a flute, a trumpet, and three clarinets—are all privately owned by members of the band and orchestra. The instruments are valued at over $100 each.

The first theft took place early in the first term when a trumpet owned by James E. Rutter of '63 disappeared. The next theft was not until March 30, at the time of the combined MIT-Smith College Orchestra concert. Here the clarinet of Roy L. Komack '63 was stolen.

On April 24, a clarinet belonging to William J. Podolsky '62 was reported stolen. Then, in rapid succession, another clarinet, belonging to a graduate student, was reported stolen. At this time of the combined MIT-Smith Orchestra concert, the clarinet of Roy L. Komack '63 was taken.

All privately owned instruments except Podolsky's clarinet were insured. None have yet been recovered.

The risk of theft has led to plans to build a number of locked cabinets in the instrument room, according to Murphy. At present, property managers of both the band and the orchestra are taking steps to improve the security of the remaining instruments for the rest of the year.

Second Century Fund exceeds goal

In a combined total of $10 million during the campaign, a fund totaling six million dollars. Members of the MIT Corporation, the Institute's governing board, individually or as organizations, gave more than $32 million.

"This backing by the Institute's own trustees," said Kilian, "has been a major factor in our success and a demonstration that the trustees of a privately controlled institution, in action as well as speech, work to find its independence."

Dr. Kilian referred to the Second Century Fund as "a pathway toward a heartening manifestation of the confidence of our trustees in our ability to build strengths in all institutions."

"We may conclude, then, that the new resources which have been made available to MIT to support a distinguished institution like MIT to achieve the full potential and in its mission, to build for the future and teach, to do close to the fullest its mission for national leadership."
