Lack of Student Center information concerns activities at conference

A Student Center Committee report scheduled to be given to the MIT Student Government at the 1963 Endicott Conference was not delivered because of a lack of information on which to base the report. Some activities expressed concern over the apparent lack of organization among between architect Prof. Eduardo Catalano and other Student Government officials. The architect was invited to visit and discuss plans for the activities' offices. Another concern is how far the funds for furnishing the offices of the Student Center Committee have been spent.

MIT Administration officials have voiced confidence in the MIT student body and the system of student government, in the wake of the current disclosures of the lack of Student Center information concerns activities at conference. "It may be in part of rule of a lack of strong concern by the students and faculty in their education," the officials noted. "We have felt that the administration has been too much in control of the situation." The officials noted that the administration has been too much in control of the situation. "It looks like a real good idea to me," the officials said.
