Savery's speech at Wellesley covers national economic problems

By Charles Ellis

"What Every Housewife Should Know About the Federal Debt" was the major topic discussed by Professor Paul A. Samuelson before a nearly all feminine audience at Alumni Hall, Wellesley College on Tuesday, November 10. On the question of why he picked this topic, Samuelson stated that there could be an urgent political need to educate the housewife. Referring to a recent address by Senator Goldwater before a women's group, he noted that Goldwater had said that, "any housewife would be more able and capable to chair the Council of Economic Advisers than Walter Weller or any of the other 'liberal economists.' Therefore, rather than waste time on the unenlightened, our millionaire professor decided to go to the grass roots.

Samuelson's address looked in to the practical political problems of implementing sound accepted macroeconomic theory into public policy. Basically, alluding to deficit spending, he pointed out that it was nearly impossible to convince the businessman or politician of the validity of the falsity of composition. And rather than give up there, he has decided to "beat them at their own game" with a micro study to show comparisons of the most efficient organizations in the world, next to the Vatican, American Telephone and Telegraph. The ability of the telephone company to increase its bonded debt over the year yet remains the bluest of the blue chips is proof that it is possible for the government to do the same. Other topics of the evening were, "What Every Young Girl Should Know About the Gold Plan" and "What Is Like To Be Hated By Over a Million Unemployed During Finals Period?"
