JUNIUS TREE: 'Excellent entertainment'

Hogan, hard-pressed in reducing Robin and/or flushing Dave, employs every imaginable method of spying on the young would-be lovers, and hilarious times, money, and ingenuity on projects to achieve Robin and Dave. Eventually, of course, love and purity triumph. Dave and Robin get married, and Hogan is relegated to a life of banishment among the beauties.

Jack Lemmon as Hogan is entertaining, although not very plausible. Edie Adams as Irene is both entertaining and believable — keep an eye out for her in the future: she has quite a bit amount of talent. Carol Lynley as Robin is lightweight, but manages to carry the ball. Dean Jones fills spaces adequately.

Robert Lansing and Imogene Coca as Murphy, the gardener, and his wife provide some of the funniest lines in the movie, and add substantially to the overall enjoyment, handling their relatively minor roles extremely well.

High points of the show include the scenes inside Hogan's plush mechanical wolf's den, Hogan's frantic attempts to spy on Robin and Dave while tending an overly amorous cat, and an unforgettable scene involving Hogan and a stethoscope.

All in all, "under the Junius Tree" affords a good evening's entertainment, and is well worth the price of admission.
